

Letter of Recommendation Guidelines

Letters of Recommendation are a very important part of your private university and/or scholarship application. They provide colleges and scholarship committees with information about you as a person, not just as a student. Your letter is a great place to talk about things that make you stand out among thousands of applicants.

When you ask a teacher, counselor or community member to write a letter for you, show them your appreciation and professional manner; ask them in writing and provide them with plenty of information about yourself.

Include in your brief, typed note when you need the letter returned and how you will retrieve the letter from them, or if they mail it directly. PLEASE provide plenty of lead time for this letter (AT LEAST TWO WEEKS !).

Provide the letter writer with plenty of background information about yourself so they may write a detailed, quality letter for you (resume). You should provide a description of three important experiences, activities, or achievements in your life along with your resume. Be concise. Type your resume so you can use it for a variety of purposes.

If you do not know your counselor well, consider including the names of teachers who know you well so they can inquire about your characteristics with other staff members.

Your resume should include:

- List of extracurricular activities
- Volunteer/paid work experience
- Travel abroad experience
- Detailed account of 3 of your significant experiences
- Characteristics to describe yourself
- Hobbies and/or special interests
- Academic/career interests
- Awards/achievements
- Test scores (SAT, ACT, AP) and GPA
- Special circumstances
- Personal references

Provide everything the letter writer may need including addressed, stamped envelopes, email addresses, and/or transcripts. Provide your application number.

Consider getting extra signed copies addressed to: "To whom it may concern" for your next round of applications.

Send your letter writer a thank you, or even bring them a candy bar!

The amount of effort that you invest in your resume and pre-letter information packet is indicative of your work ethic and your desire to be accepted to the college of your choice and win those scholarships!
